About this boat

PRICE REDUCTION MOTIVATED SELLER The 'Klipperaak' is derived from the Dutch inland clipper and is distinguished from the (inland) clipper by its stern. Instead of a receding stern and the stern behind the rudder stock, the clipperaak has a full and round stern with an attached rudder, like the aak or tjalk. That is why the ship originally had no steering wheel but a tiller to steer. Because of this full stern, the ship had a larger aft ship than the clipper, so there was more living space for the skipper and his family. Clipper ships were built at various Dutch shipyards between approximately 1890 and 1930. After sailing as a cargo ship under sail in Goes for many years, the ship was lengthened from the origina...
